

Journal of Cambridge Studies

Journal of Cambridge Studies (JCS) is a quarterly academic publication with a focus on social sciences relating to China (ISSN: 1747-5384). It is currently published by the Association of Cambridge Studies, a scholarly society for China Studies at the University of Cambridge. Established in 2006 with a sole focus on educational research, JCS has experienced fast developments during the past few years with coverage of research topics rapidly extending to other fields such as economics, law, political research, sociology and cultural studies. The primary aim of Journal of Cambridge Studies is to promote the understanding of China through the dissemination of high-impact research in relevant social science subject areas. Both contemporary and historical perspectives are considered important to JCS. JCS always encourages interdisciplinary studies and promotes talks between scholars from different geographical areas. To that end, we have drawn on our extensive network of experts from both China and Cambridge to encourage exchange of ideas between the East and the West. Over the last few years, we have contributors from within Europe, China as well as US, and we are seeing more subscriptions from Universities and independent research institutions around the world. JCS targets to deliver a rapid platform for communicating China related social sciences. Therefore we strive to keep the review period short - often within two months. We'd like to invite scholars from all relevant fields to contribute to this exciting journal. "Journal of Cambridge Studies (JCS) is a Social Sciences publication with a focus on China Studies that brings scholars from the East and West together" Editorial Board,
Journal of Cambridge Studies